BREAKOUT SESSION SUMMARIES

1:00 – 1:40 p.m.

Auditorium: Public & Private Sector Partnerships in Emergency Management

Emergency events respect no strata of society or size of organization or, for that matter, any public or private sector organization. When emergency events occur, public and private sector organizations alike are disrupted. When major emergency events occur, disruptions spread across all ideological lines and affect everyone in the path and the wake of emergency events. Partnerships form, seemingly out of thin air, to fend off the impacts. The lessons of major emergency events are clear; if public and private sector organizations can pre-plan and prepare partnerships, the impacts from emergency events can be mitigated. In this presentation, Daniel Stoecker and Jeff Crenshaw speak on ways to facilitate collaborations that prepare for and respond to the recovery needs of America's communities.

Media Center: Family – Community Emergency Preparedness – Becoming Self-Sufficient in Disasters

Among the most often visited, federal government websites are websites dedicated to family and community emergency preparedness and disasters. Given the natural and technological dangers faced by Americans today, a lot of attention is being paid to preparation. Studies of past emergencies demonstrate that communities rely first and foremost on its members within their communities. Emergency response partnerships at their very core begin in and among the community's members. John Jarrard of the American Red Cross, and Bob Crane, of the Tennessee Emergency Management Agency, focus on emergency preparedness for the family and on resources that exist inside and across communities. Organizations that assist in emergency preparedness and response are identified and described.

2:10 – 2:50 p.m.

Auditorium: Medical Emergencies and How the State Partners with Regional and Local Medical Organizations

Large medical emergencies, which happen often without warning and can overwhelm city and county resources, cause hospitals, ambulatory care centers, and emergency medical services to implement coordination activities with each other. Just exactly how does a regional and/or state organized medical emergency response effort develop and work? What roles do state agencies play? And, how do hospitals coordinate with regional and state organizations to effect a coordinated, relatively smooth, emergency medical response? Dr. Tim Jones, Chief Epidemiologist for the State of Tennessee, offers several insights into how the State of Tennessee's medical resources partner with area and regional emergency medical organizations.

Media Center: Emergency Movements and Relocations of East Tennessee Populations – A Panel on the Necessity of Partnerships

One of the most perplexing problems facing communities today is how relatively large numbers of populations can be relocated during emergencies with the least amount of disruption. When hurricanes strike America's coastline, coastal cities have some notice and are able to invoke pre-prepared evacuation plans to relocate their populations inland. But what happens when such area- or region-wide emergencies occur without advance notice and relatively large numbers of populations must be relocated quickly? Under the leadership of a panel moderator, pre-planned questions and questions from the audience on this topic are put to a panel of experts.

3:20 – 4:00 p.m.

Auditorium: A Status Report on Terrorism and Counterterrorism by the Supervisory Special Agent for the Knoxville Joint Terrorism Task Force

With the events unfolding across the world, many wonder when, where, and if, America will be attacked again and if so, to what extent. America's federal, state, and local law enforcement and emergency response assets have worked hard, and mostly behind the scenes, to protect our way of life. Many partnerships have formed since the events of September 11, 2001. Travis Carlisle, Supervisory Special Agent for the FBI, provides a status report on the State's efforts to prevent the next attack.

Media Center: How Does Emergency Decision Making Flow In, On, Around, and From the DOE Oak Ridge Reservation; Who's In Charge of What?

When an emergency event occurs on a DOE Oak Ridge Reservation (ORR) site, Oak Ridge National Laboratory (ORNL), Y-12 National Security Complex (NSC), or the East Tennessee Technology Park (ETTP), communications flow from the event to the Lab, Plant, or Park Shift Superintendent's (L/PSS) offices. From the L/PSS office, event information flows to management, to site workers, to DOE, and to all three sites. Using emergency planning documents that were created to analyze events and consequences, the L/PSS office categorizes and, if necessary, classifies events as operational emergency events. Under the leadership of a panel moderator, pre-planned questions and questions from the audience on this topic are put to a panel of experts.

Rich Serino was appointed by President Barack Obama and confirmed by the U.S. Senate on October 5, 2009. Mr. Serino reported to FEMA on October 19, 2009 and began working directly with Administrator Craig Fugate to build, sustain, and improve the Department's capacity to prepare for, protect against, respond to, recover from, and mitigate all hazards.

Mr. Serino brings 35 years of state and local emergency management and emergency medical services (EMS) experience to his position at FEMA. Prior to his appointment as Deputy Administrator, he served as Chief of Boston EMS and Assistant Director of the Boston Public Health Commission. In that role, he bolstered the city's response plans for major emergencies, including chemical, biological, and radiological attacks. He also led citywide planning for H1N1 influenza.

Mr. Serino served as an Incident Commander for over 35 mass casualty incidents and for all of Boston's major planned events, including the Boston Marathon, Boston's Fourth of July celebration, First Night, and the 2004 Democratic National Convention, a National Special Security Event.

Mr. Serino began working for Boston EMS in 1973; over the years he rose through the ranks and in 1999 became Chief of the Department. During his tenure as Chief, he has seen the agency expand and improve to become nationally recognized for the first-rate services provided by the agency's EMTs and Paramedics.

Since 1998, Mr. Serino has been a National Faculty member for the Domestic Preparedness Program. He was an original contributing member for the Defense Department's Domestic Preparedness Training Program and Metropolitan Medical Response System. Mr. Serino has been involved, since its inception, with the Lessons Learned Information Sharing (www.llis.gov) network for emergency responders. As a consultant to the Pentagon and the Defense Department, Mr. Serino served on the 9/11 after-action team to assess medical consequence management policies and procedures.

Mr. Serino attended Harvard University's Kennedy School of Government Senior Executives in State and Local Government program in 2000. He also completed the Kennedy School's National Preparedness Leadership Initiative in 2005 and recently graduated from the Executive Leadership Program, Center for Homeland Defense and Security at the Naval Postgraduate School.

Daniel Stoecker works with, and on behalf of, members and partners to facilitate whole community collaborations that prepare for and respond to the recovery needs of America's communities in times of disasters. Daniel currently serves as a Co-Chair for the National Mass Care Council, which provides leadership and coordination support to empower local implementation of the National Mass Care Strategy throughout the nation. He is also a Member of the Center for Disaster Philanthropy's Advisory Council. Daniel was the Founding Chairman for the City of Houston Annual Citizenship Week, a program that promotes civic engagement, encourages inclusion and celebrates diversity. He was appointed by two mayors to serve as that program's Chairman for three years. He also served as Chairman for the City of Houston Mayor's Advisory Committee on Immigrant and Refugee Affairs, as well as a Board Member for a number of non-profit organizations.

Daniel has championed many causes including ensuring equal access to justice and the more effective delivery of disaster recovery assistance in collaboration with national, state and local leaders. In the emergency services field, Daniel served as a member of, and helped establish, local VOADs and Long Term Recovery Committees. He has managed large scale disaster response and recovery efforts, for such events as Hurricane Katrina, Hurricane Ike, and the Gulf Oil Spill. Daniel has been invited to speak at conferences and other venues as an expert presenter on many high-profile subjects. Recently, he addressed the promise of the VOAD Movement as an emerging American institution that delivers a means to strengthen a community's relationship network to better address disaster challenges and build resiliency. Prior to entering the civic sector in 2005, Daniel served over twenty years in private sector management in the telecommunications and media industries. Daniel is a graduate of the International Studies Program at the University of St. Thomas and now serves as an advisor for its Center for International Studies. He is a proud AmeriCorps VISTA alumnus and encourages fellow citizens to engage in community-building volunteer service activities.

Jeff Crenshaw is an entrepreneur. Jeff Crenshaw, through his work at Continuum, has provided business continuation and post-recovery planning services for many major business clients worldwide. He has more than 25 years of experience in the emergency management field, including serving as Director of Emergency Management for Memphis and Shelby County. Mr. Crenshaw served as the Director of the Disaster Recovery Business Alliance, in conjunction with the Electric Power Research Institute. He also served as a Board Member for CARRI – Community and Regional Resilience Institute - in conjunction with Oak Ridge National Laboratory. Mr. Crenshaw works closely with Tennessee Emergency Management Agency and their Public-Private Partnerships, as well as with Oak Ridge National Laboratory to connect the private sector to emergency management solutions developed in the Lab.

Tim F. Jones, MD, was appointed State Epidemiologist for the Tennessee Department of Health in 2008. In this position, Jones directs the department's Communicable and Environmental Disease Services (CEDS) section of the Bureau of Health Services.

As State Epidemiologist and CEDS Section Chief, Dr. Jones is responsible for the statewide investigation and epidemiologic surveillance of the following programs: Bioterrorism, Emerging Infections, Environmental Epidemiology, Hospital Infections, Immunization, Public Health Preparedness, Strategic National Stockpile, Tuberculosis Elimination, Outbreak and Contact Investigations, Disease Surveillance and the Division of HIV/AIDS/STDs.

"I look forward to continuing to work with the Communicable and Environmental Disease Services Division in this new leadership role," said Jones. "Tennessee's CEDS office is made up of some of the most experienced and dedicated professionals in the country and I believe our team is prepared to grow professionally with the public health outbreak and emergency preparedness challenges we may face in the future."

Dr. Jones has been employed with the Tennessee Department of Health since July 1999. He most recently served as Tennessee's Deputy State Epidemiologist and Director of the FoodNet and West Nile Virus (WNV) Programs. Jones holds a Bachelor of Arts degree from Amherst College and a Medical Degree from Stanford University School of Medicine. He completed his three year residency in family medicine and one year fellowship in maternal and child health at Memorial Hospital of Rhode Island and is certified by the National Board of Medical Examiners.

Prior to moving to Tennessee, Jones practiced with the National Health Service Corps in an underserved area in Utah before joining the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention's (CDC) Epidemic Intelligence Service in 1997. He is a noted expert in the area in foodborne disease epidemiology and has offered national and international consultations with the CDC and the World Health Organization. He has traveled extensively in this capacity, including accepting assignments in Alaska, Liberia, Central and South America, Japan, Yemen, Malaysia and the Philippines.

Supervisory Special Agent (SSA) Travis Carlisle is the Federal Bureau of Investigation supervisor for the Knoxville Joint Terrorism Task Force (JTTF). Joint Terrorism Task Forces are based in 103 cities nationwide, including at least one in each of our 56 field offices. Today, the JTTFs include more than 4,200 members nationwide hailing from over 600 state and local agencies and 50 federal agencies.

The JTTFs provide one-stop shopping for information regarding terrorist activities. They create familiarity among investigators and managers before a crisis. And perhaps most importantly, they pool talents, skills, and knowledge from across the law enforcement and intelligence communities into a single team that responds together.

SSA Carlisle has been with the Federal Bureau of Investigation for 11 years and has held a variety of positions in counterterrorism. Travis is eminently familiar with the process, pitfalls, and the State's and the Nation's progress in forming and maintaining partnerships.

Prior to coming to TEMA, Craig did volunteer service in Morocco with the Peace Corps from 1999 to 2001. His education includes a Bachelor of Science degree in Parks Management and a Master's in Public Administration.

Steve Johnson, Region 2 Coordinator, Radiological Assistance Program, Department of Energy

Few know the U.S. DOE Emergency Management System more extensively than Steve Johnson. Steve joined the DOE in 1984 and has served as a Weapons Quality Assurance Inspector, an Emergency Management Specialist, and today as the Regional Response Coordinator for the DOE/NNSA Region 2 Radiological Assistance Program (RAP) emergency response asset. Steve provides management oversight and direction for all activities related to the Region 2 RAP. Over the years, he has deployed many times to support National Special Security Events, Special Events, exercises and actual incidents.

Dennis Leach, Park Shift Superintendent, ETTP, URS / CH2M Hill Oak Ridge, LLC

Dennis Leach has given nearly 40 years of service to the DOE Oak Ridge Reservation; 4 years at Y-12 and 36 years at the ETTP as a Fire Protection Program Coordinator, Fire Department Shift Commander, and Park Shift Superintendent (PSS). When Dennis is not handling many types of events at ETTP as the Park Shift Superintendent, he can be found at the Bristol Motor Speedway where he has served as an On-Track Fire and Rescue Crew Chief since 2002.

Michele Wolfgram, Team Manager, Emergency Management Program, Oak Ridge National Laboratory

With over 14 years in the emergency management field, Ms. Wolfgram leads the ORNL Emergency Management Team. She has prior experience in both emergency management and nuclear safety for a subcontractor company at sites across the DOE complex. Michele received her Bachelor of Science degree in Chemical Engineering from the University of Rochester.
